Cabinet Post for Cities

It is being freely predicted that the incoming Kennedy administration will propose a new cabinet post for city affairs within a year.

Supporters point out that the Democratic party platform backs such a post and that Sen. Kennedy also endorsed the proposal during the recent presidential cam-

Sen. Clark (D-Pa.), who is a former mayor of Philadelphia, has indicated that he will offer a new bill to set up such a denument on housing and metropolitan arrains. His original bill on this matter was renomed rayonably by the senate banking committee this year but did not come to a

The proposal has the strong support of such organizations as the National Association of Homebuilders, the American Municipal Association, the United States Congress of Mayors, the AFL-CIO, the National Housing Conference, the National Association of Housing and Redevelopment Officials, the American Institute of Planners, and others. Some have argued that since the farmer has his own secretary in the cabinet, the city dweller is entitled to like treatment. However, the strongest demand comes from something deeper than that. The fact of the matter is that life in the city has become so complicated it is necessary to give special attention to it at

The housing administrator. Norman P. Mason, recently pointed out that cities now are in a "profound domestic problem of unusual complexity." He feels the time is near when the federal government will have to reorganize its work in the field of housing and community development. He says. This would make easier the full integration of the government's housing and community development program with the over-all programs of the executive branch. From the viewpoint of the public generally and of our urban areas, a government department concerned with housing and community development problems no doubt would be a forward step."

Robert E. Merriam, a deputy assistant to the President, said recently, "The time has come to end the inflexible categorized nature of federal programs for the benefit of urban areas. Often the law prevents doing as common sense might dictate."

Merriam was, no doubt, referring to the present imbalance of attention given by the federal government to chies in comparison with the attention given to suburban areas when he said, "Would it not be wise from the over-all standpoint, to encourage, more than we have, FHA type of insured loans in older communities even if a larger degree of risk were involved."

That is the big problem of cities in a nutshell. Attention is given to developing suburban areas which not only takes from the cities tax revenue they need to carry on, but also encourages the central blight which always has struck the older communities. No city in the United States of any size is without its blighted area today. The government has offered some help in razing the buildings and replacing them with modern structures but apparently something more is needed. It appears to be almost impossible for private capital to undertake such reconstruction programs. It certainly is impossible for the individual to provide himself with a home in the heart of a great city in this day and age. Federal help seems to be necessary to make a success of such undertakings. Quite obviously a government department, with a head of cabinet stature, would be a great help in working out some of these very complicated problems.

Gov. Nelson's pessimistic prediction that a generation of Wisconsin students would be denied educational opportunities before the public woke up to the importance of paying for higher education may be right. But the cause is more than what he called the failure of educational groups to sell their problem to the public and the legislature.

The legislative philosophy in Wisconsin is that any graduate of a Wisconsin high school deserves a chance for more schooling. Up to a point this is an intelligent conclusion. Many youngsters develop slowly academically, but the high rate of drop-outs and failures at the universities and state colleges, and the even higher percentage of students who barely get through, indicate that either the preparation or motivation is inadequate. The university adopted a more stringent entrance exam last spring and we would recommend the same thing to the state colleges. The rating in a high school graduating class is flexible and it should be because of the wide variation in high school schedules. courses and competition. But a tightening of entrance requirements by the public institutions is bound to be felt in the high schools with a resulting more serious approach to academic work.

The university and state college officials have been strangely averse to any drastic changes in the school year or week. The Coordinating Committee is completing a series of studies of trimester and four quarter systems in other colleges but their conclusions are almost foregone because of the attitude against such systems. It may be that the present 8-weeks' summer session is the best system for the university and colleges: but the public would feel happier about it if it could be sure that the study was objectively made. The opposition to Saturday classes has been even more violent despite the fact. that almost every private college in the state, and probably in the nation, regularly has scheduled classes Saturday mornings. Valid reasons against such classes are student jobs for those who are working their way through college or, in some cases, the extra work load upon the teachers. But the reasons which generally are given are the interference with the varsity athletic program or simply the belief that students won't attend Saturday classes. The taxpayer may accurately begin to feel that the student who won't attend Saturday classes doesn't belong in college anyway, or at least in a college supported primarily by public funds.

Figures on expected enrollments and the cost of providing buildings and teachers are stunning. But a return to the point of view that a college education is a privilege rather than a right might help convince the over-burdened taxpayer and the sensitive legislator that the vast sums of money are worth it.

We Move to Help Ourselves

George Hanson, state geologist, has prepared a plan for an aeromagnetic survey of geological deposits under the state's surface. It would permit the drawing of a geological map and while it would not tell exactly what minerals are in the ground it would show mining companies the most likely place to go looking for ore. The survey is regarded as necessary to discovering any potential deposits in the state.

There have been requests from national mining companies for this information. Hanson points out that glacial surfaces cover the northern and north central parts of Wisconsin and that is where so-called mineral lands are located. The mineral lands are an extension of the Canadian shield, a vast iron ore range in Canada.

Sen. Alexander Wiley recently urged the congressional economics study committee to make special ciforts to resolve employment and economic problems in upper Wisconsin. He said northern counties have in recent years faced difficult economic problems that resulted not only in loss of jobs and economic 'dropbacks' but also a decline in population estimated at about 14 per cent in the last 20 years. The senator told the chairman of the committee that he was in full agreement with the committee's statement that "It is high time we took action -- not just engaged in study and contemplation of this serious situa-

Unless the committee has something tangible to work on it will have to spend much time in study. The state geologist is proposing something in the form of action which is more likely to bring results than a congressional committee. The survey would cost only about $100,000 although it would require years to complete. But this is $106,000 we scarcely can afford not to spend. If we are ever to make anything out of the northern counties which are in such desperate straits we must find a basis upon which to act. The geological survey proposal, backed by Gov. Nelson, appears to be a perfectly proper and logical step.

Merry Married Methodists and Kum Dubl Club members of First Methodist Church held their traditional "Hanging of the Greens" party Saturday evening. Christmas trees, wreaths, ribbons and sprigs of holly hung by members gave the sanctuary and halls the look of the holiday season. Mr. and Mrs. Frans Vaurio, Mr. and Mrs. Donald Buxton and Mr. and Mrs. Leslie Gunter were in charge. Adjusting the giant pine tree in an effort to get the bare spot next to the wall are Arthur Kippenban and Ronald Balke. Hanging the wreath below are Mr. and Mrs. Archie Johnson.

Rebekahs Will Meet Wednesday

Deborah Rebekah Lodge No. 13 will hold a regulâr meeting at 8 p.m. Wednesday at Odd Fellows 1 Hall. Members have been requested to bring canned goods to be turned over to welfare agencies for Christmas baskets.

The potluck supper heid jointly Saturday evening with the Theta Rho Girls and Odd Fellows and their guests featured a talent show given by the children. Miss Donna Ellefson, Theta Rho president, supervised the youngsters. Santa presented gifts to the children and treats to all.

An election of officers was held at the Dec. 7 meeting Mrs W. E. Lyman was elected noble grand, Mrs. Louis Peotter, vice grand; Mrs. D. L. EAR TROUBLES REACHED BY ADJUSTMENTS

Writing on his recent research of the nerve supply to the ear in the Journal of Laryngology, Dr. Philip Frazier makes a new discovery of the intricate nerve distribution to the inner ear.

He found that nerve impulses to the ear pass through the sympathetic nerve trunk which is directly connected by communicating fibers to the nerve cord. A disturbance of impulses to the sympathetic nerve trunk can interfere with the vital nerve imoulses supplying the inner ear. Thus spinal adjustments can reach many ear conditions, as thousands of cases have proven, by removing interferences with the normal transmission of nerve im-

BY SAM DAWSON

AP Business News Analyst NEW YORK (AP) - Gold and : the United States' law about it topes for debate when the new primmistration takes over in about .

The question: Should we keep a gold backing for our dollarseven when you can't get gold for yeur dollars?

Changes in the present law are being urged every week or so. Some want it eased considerably, so that a gold reserve would a longer be required as legal meeting for our currency.

Others want the law tightened so that foreigners-or Americans eperating from abroad - couldn't drain gold out of the Treasury's stock as easily as now. Want Law Junked

And a hard core of gold-stanshard men want the law junked altogether and would have us go back to the days when every dollar was backed by gold, and freely exchangeable.

Gold always has been one of the most controversial subjects in American politics. It could become so once again-

The law passed in 1904 as a degression measure set the price A ci gold at $35 an ounce, devaluing the dollar in the process, and made it illegal for American citirens to buy or own it save as jewirv, household articles, antique orrs, or for industrial purposes. 🔊 It allows other nations and their central hanks to turn in any spare. dollars they may have—and they ave a lot right now-for gold at the rate of $35 an ounce.

The most recent attack on the iw has come on the rule that a gold reserve must be held equal 2 to 25 per cent of the bank notes. and deposits that are counted as American currency.

This reserve is about $12 billion of the current total gold holdings about $18 billion. This leaves free about $5 billion to meet for- 🗞 on obligations, and these now total close to $29 billion.

If all toreigners decided at once . lat they wanted gold instead of dollars or U.S. securities, the Treasury would have to suspend 🐔 pold payments. Such a run is held most improbable.

Financial Dealings A leading American banker and the head of the International Monelery Fund has urged doing away with this gold reserve rule 🏖 international financial dealines. Henry C. Alexander, chairman

6: Morgan Guaranty Trust of New York, holds that since U.S. citireas can't turn in their paper morey for gold, the reserve is of questionable value to them, even 🐔 sychologically, and that all our gold should be held merely for the settlement of international transactions. He argues that sound money isn't based on gold re-serves but on prudent management of federal finances and on 🔊 efficient production of American industry and trade.

Opponents of any tinkering with # the 25 per cent legal gold reserve. eraue that it would undermine 🐊 world confidence in the dollar. vould only encourage inflationary mancial policies in Washington. and mught make American them-5- ves wonder about the value of & their paper money.

They may find it difficult to regain their sharpest competitive edge. At this time of year, any kind of weather can be expected, and if the elements force both teams to abandon the skyways, the Packer running game should be superior. The Bays proved in the mud of Frisco that the Taylor and Hornung-powered ground attack is good in all types of weather. Of course, snow and mud didn't deter the Eagles in their last two title engagements. They beat the Cards, 7-0, in a 48 blizzard and n took the Rams, 14-0, in '49 in rain-soaked Los Angeles. In the Eagles' only other title game (1947) they were subdued, 28-21, on four long runs by the Cards' Charley Trippi and Elmer Angsman. The Packers also have a 2-game win streak in title games (14-7 at New York in 44 and 27-0 over the Giants in '39' and have a 3-1 record over-ail for East-West playoffs. The Packers hope to become the fourth straight Western club to annex the grand championship. Detroit won it in '57 and the Colts came through in '58 and '59'. Automatic Devices. More Compact Units Featured for Gifts

Camera bugs this Christmas are likely to get equipment to make picture taking easier than ever. Because of the trend to more automatic devices on cameras, photographic equipment has become a gift for people who formerly said they'd never be able to take pictures.

The automatic eye, which adjusts the lens for correct exposure in either light or dark weather, comes now on $10 cameras as well as the over-$100 models. Adjustments may be operated manually for flash pictures or for unusual situations.

Automatic film advance, for taking pictures in rapid succession and for avoiding double exposures, is increasing in popularity. Some cameras have batteries to advance the film after the shutter is tripped

Flash Built In

Flashguns are built into many inexpensive cameras Using new flashbulbs the size of the end of era alone did in the past.

Cameras and Accessories are available in prices ranging from a roll of film to long a magazine of sudes over and costly precision instruments. Among possible Christmas gifts are, from left, a overcamera which gives a finished print seconds after it is taken; a movie camera with automatic eye and turret lenses; a compact, versatile movie light: a movie camera with zoom lens; a 35mm candid camera; an inexpensive camera with built-in flash, in a gift kit with film, batteries and bulbs: a 35mm camera, case and flash kit; a single lens reflex camera with built in light meter; and an elec-

Real Estate Man Offers Service To Men and Women

BY JEAN SPRAIN WILSON AP Newsfeatures Writer

NEW YORK (AP) - If you're a working girl who whit complete's sold on living alone, you may be tempted to exchange your privacy for a roommate who will help you face the landlord on the first of

Net if you're not the roommate. type, you may ave miseran a ever after. And so might your room

Just as some personallies are happier rever getting married certain singletons are better our not sharing their dom coes This comes i om an enterpris mg young real estate agent. Lloyd Baum, who operates a roommate placement service His own frustrating search for a compatible man to share the high cost of his big city apartment led the handsome 32 year - old pachefor into business last spring Interviews

Since then he has found a surtable tenant for hamself, and he has also evaluated apartments interviewed investigated and eventually matched up hundreds of applicants. Baum says he has had almost 100 per cent satisfied

During an applicant's interview he fathers personal and financial information and makes notes about appearance and personality traits. He follows up by questioning past landlords, acquaintarces and creditors

If the professional roommatefinder does not like what he discovers, or if a woman hedges about her age or balks at certain questions, Baum becomes wary Or, if he notes in conversation that his applicant is extremely emotional, strongly opinionated, or unduly withdrawn, he politely suggests she would be happier living

Advantages

However, for those who are the types who can sacrifice privacy without suffering there are other, advantages besides shared expenses. Two can divide cooking and housekeeping chores and two can multiply friendships Baum offers these rules as a guide to being a better roommate. 1. Make up your mind that nobody is going to see eye-to - eye

2 Be considerate of the other person's sleeping habits.

3 Keep reasonably neat about belongings, but don't be so fastidious that you are nerve-wracking to live with.

4 Reach a common agreement about house rules Avoid being

Don't Borrow

5 Hre someone to clean the apartment at least once a week, if possible. The expenditure will prevent battles on the homefront

6 Work out an equitable agreemert for sharing food bills according to the average number of meals eaten at home. 7. Don't borrow your roommate's clothing or toilet articles 8. Be quiet but don't be too quiet. Nobody likes to live with a vegetable 9 Entertain and expect your roommate to entertain But keep each other advised as to expected guests so that each may or may not join the party as he likes 10 Respect each other's desire

Two-Week Respite From Blather Provides Occasion for Noteworthy Comedy Debut

BY JINGO

The last week of 1960 and the first week of 1961 will be memorable for the insomniac viewers of television. Jack Paar will be on vacation. That's the way to see the old year out and the new year in!

Two weeks void of the banalities of Mr Mediocrity would be noteworthy in itself — it is an amazing phenomenon how Paar's continual protestation of his total inadequacies has developed such a widespread and loval following as though most of the late-late audience needs the assurance that there is a creature in the limelight even more inadequate than it is. This hiatus in the blather will be even more of an occasion than normal. It will serve as a debut of some magnitude. Along with usual substitutes, unbrane Hugh Downs and wittily humble Joey Bishop Paar's reins will be placed in the golden hands of mentators, Shelley Berman, who'll try his hand as "host" on Jan. 2 ble news" and special features Jingo hopes it becomes a habit have a good kick. -the Paar vacations; that is.

Decreases in Three Categories Account For Smaller Budget

KAUKAUNA - Highway and bridge expenditures in 1961 are expected to be $7 398 less than appropriated for these purposes in 1960, according to the budget.

Total expense for 1961 is listed at $127,372 compared to $134,770 in 1960. Major reason for the decrease is noted in three categories. The 1960 budget showed $17,000 appropriated for maintenance of street machinery whereas the 1961 figure is $13,000 or $4,-
